

Introduction to Flavours

Course Summary

A unique two-day course consisting of lectures and practicals designed to give delegates a full understanding of all things 'Flavour.' It will include hands-on creative workshops covering sweet and savoury flavours.

Who should attend?

The course is aimed at those in the food industries who are involved with, and decide upon, the flavour of their company's products: such as development technologists, marketeers, trainee flavourists and quality controllers from food manufacturers, retailers, ingredient and flavour companies. It will also appeal to chefs.

Entry Requirements

There are no formal entry requirements.

Course Structure & Content

The course has been designed so that lectures are interwoven with demonstrations and applications. The use of raw materials will be rigorously explored and then applied in both sweet and savoury flavours giving delegates the chance to create their own flavours from first principles. This will allow delegates to learn by tasting.

Subjects covered include:

- Flavour; the science of deliciousness
- The chemistry of flavour
- The flavour brain; the biology of flavour perception
- The influences of culture on flavour choices and perception
- A brief history of the flavour industry
- The types of flavours available to the food industry (e.g. top notes, thermal process flavourings, natural extracts, essential oils)
- Flavour manufacturing processes (e.g. reaction flavours, enzymatic extraction)
- Legislation
- Natural flavours
- Green flavours
- Sensory evaluation
- Flavour modifiers and modulators
- Encapsulation techniques and flavour release
- Application of flavours to food products

Assessment

There will be a short test at the end of the course.
